

In your opinion, what is the prevalence of catatonia in hospital patients?

Alyssa Phillips:

In your opinion, what percentage of patients receiving mental health or other medical treatment actually have catatonia?

Dr. Fink:

I would say that the literature of various hospitals where they've done the surveys is, somewhere between 7 and 14% of patients in hospital have catatonia. And when we did our study at Stony Brook, we found 14% of the patients, of the general hospital patients, had signs of catatonia.